

Challenge # 1

- Write a generic Python parser in parser.py to extracts all elements of the given xml file
- Using Bootstrap Framework, display the data in a responsive HTML table in table.html which can be sorted and filtered
- Try to keep it simple

Challenge #2

Please visit the following webpage: <http://www.theglobeandmail.com/report-on-business/top-business-stories/many-canadians-are-raiding-their-rrsps-just-to-get-by/article33949004/>

You will notice that you cannot read this article in a regular fashion but article information is still accessible please find the easiest possible way to read it (less code as possible / pure JavaScript) and store in variable x. You can use DevTools in Chrome and play with its console. As in the next screenshot, you should be able to print out content of x variable directly to console and able to read the extract in raw text.

We are looking to extract the article contents here

www.theglobeandmail.com/report-on-business/top-business-stories/many-canadians-are-raiding-their-rsps-just-to-get-by/article33949004/

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Enter a term, stock symbol or company name

Search

Login Register

Select City

Help

This content is only available to Globe Unlimited subscribers. Become one now to read more.

JOURNALISM MATTERS.

The Globe is committed to bringing you intelligent, impactful stories. Quality journalism exists because of readers like you, readers who demand more and expect only the best from our reporting.

We are honoured to be an essential part of your day.

Read this story, and important ones like it, with your digital subscription to Globe Unlimited. SUBSCRIBE NOW

Already a print newspaper subscriber? Click here to get full access to Globe Unlimited.

Already a Globe Unlimited subscriber? Log in to keep reading.

THE GLOBE AND MAIL GLOBE UNLIMITED

- Brazil challenges Bombardier aid at WTO
- Lucky I found love long ago

Raiding the kitty

Many Canadians are raiding their RRSPs, seemingly just to get by.

It goes without saying that you don't want to do that unless you're at desperation's door, which, based on a Bank of Montreal study, at least some people seem to be.

There are alternatives, BMO says: Invest in a tax-free savings account or sock money away in a high-interest savings account or sock money away in a high-interest

REPORT ON BUSINESS
This tiny Toronto house sold for $370,000 over asking

NEWS
Trump offers to 'destiny' career' of Texas lawmaker

NEWS
Life after the presidency: Obama goes kiteboarding with Richard Branson

REPORT ON BUSINESS
Video: Done Deals: T unit with views of Lal Ontario sold for more than $80,000 over asking

Elements Console Sources Network Timeline Profiles Application Security Audits Adblock Plus

Preserve log

console.log(x)

X

Already a print newspaper subscriber? Click here to get full access to Globe Unlimited. Already a Globe Unlimited subscriber? Log in to keep reading.

Login
Register
Select City/Subscribe Help
AdChoices
Home News Opinion Business Investing Sports Life Arts Tech Drive Real Estate
Streetwise Economy International Industry News Small Business Commentary Careers Magazine
Try Globe Unlimited- 99¢/week for the first 4 weeks
And get unlimited access on all your devices
See my options!
Home» Report on Business» Business Briefing

Many Canadians are raiding their RRSPs just to get by

SUBSCRIBERS ONLY
MICHAEL BABAD
The Globe and Mail
Published Wednesday, Feb. 08, 2017 4:42AM EST
Last updated Wednesday, Feb. 08, 2017 9:53AM EST
8 Comments
Briefing highlights

Canadians raiding their RRSPs
France's Le Pen spooks markets
Brazil challenges Bombardier aid at WTO
Lucky I found love long ago
Raiding the Kitty

Many Canadians are raiding their RRSPs, seemingly just to get by.

It goes without saying that you don't want to do that unless you're at desperation's door, which, based on a Bank of Montreal study, at least some people seem to be.

There are alternatives, BMO says: Invest in a tax-free savings account or sock money away in a high-interest savings account to have accessible funds that could be used as "an emergency fund" without the need to take a tax hit or threaten what you've saved for retirement.

This week's BMO study, a mid-December Pollara survey of 1,500 people, is disconcerting.

Even though most people understand the consequences of withdrawing from a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, many still did it.

One can understand using the money to buy a home, but using it to pay bills or debts is troubling.

According to the study, Canadians pulled an average $17,213 from their RRSPs last year, compared with $15,908 a year earlier.

A full 38 per cent withdrew money before the age of 71, up four percentage points.

Thirty per cent used the money to buy property, 21 per cent for day-to-day expenses, 18 per cent for debts, and a similar number for emergencies.

Household debt is a huge problem in Canada, sitting at record levels and drawing warnings from many quarters.

"It's concerning to see that so many Canadians are dipping into their RRSPs to meet short-term needs, which should only be considered as a last resort," Chris Buttigieg of BMO's wealth management business said in releasing the numbers.

MORE ON THIS TOPIC
Rob Carrick: The new way to tell if you've saved enough for retirement
Paul Attfield: Fewer making RRSP deposits
Choosing between TFSA or RRSP? This quiz can help
Markets and Le Pen

If you cannot complete this challenge, or you think, it is not possible, please explain why and/or at least explain steps that you were able to complete in order to get to the final answer. We want to see and understand the way you think to solve this challenge.

Challenge #3

- Get all resource information for Pikachu from the API Version 2 <http://pokeapi.co/> using Python and Present it in a HTML table
- Present the code used and the HTML as solution